

was doing although I did get to see a few teachers. Also I wrote out Jay's application card so the wheels have started to turn in the direction of his entering in the seventh grade. Then after chatting a while I went down & had some lunch at Bond's (aw awful-awful too!) at one I caught the bus home where I went to see a movie (quite the low wolf I've turned out to be but no one's home). Then I went to the five and ten and bought Jay the story of Aladdin, then home. Tonight Jay and I are going to read his book, a bath and bed. All in all not very exciting but then.

Last night Dad and Mother and I were sitting in the living room reading etc. I happened to be thinking how long I had waited to be seventeen and why didn't I get a drivers license during this vacation. Out of a clear sky I popped up & said "Dad do you think I can get my license soon?" We had just been talking about you and I guess he thought I meant marriage license, anyway