

How does childcare by a grandma look like?

Perhaps you face a similar situation: You and your partner are both employed, both want to have careers and at the same time enjoy family life. To get your career and family under one roof, you bring your children to daycare in the morning. At the same time, you may find that your child is still too young for institutional care until 5 p.m. What now? How can you bridge the gap between your work and family needs and make sure that your child grows up in a warm, safe and loving environment? This article will give you a glimpse into a day with a Super Granny helping out with childcare at home.

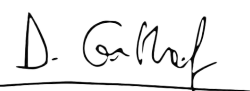

Imagine your everyday family life. You wake up, greet your partner, wake up your children and prepare breakfast. So far, everything is as usual. Only one thing is different today. After breakfast, at 8:30 a.m., you bring your children to the daycare with a calm mind because your children also know that the day in kindergarten won't be that long today. After a short farewell at the daycare, you drive to work and can fully concentrate on it. You know: At 2:30 p.m., Super Granny Elsa will pick up your little ones from the nursery and bring them home. Elsa is 63 years old, has raised children herself and loves to spend time with children. Since Elsa's grandchildren don't live nearby, she's happy that she can spend time with her children three to four times a week. While you can work flexibly, the lovable granny takes care of the food preparations at home, goes to the playground with the children, clears away a few toys and prepares the children for bed. When you and your partner come home in the evening, an essential part of childcare is already taken care of. You and your partner can relax and look calmly into the end of the day. Also, for Elsa the day of childcare is over now. Elsa says goodbye to your children and tells them that they will see each other again at the weekend, when mom and dad want to go to dinner as a couple. The children say goodbye to their Super Granny and look forward to seeing her again.

I hope you enjoyed this imaginary yet realistic story. With a super granny like Elsa, you and your children can gain another person to trust and thus a human connection of inestimable value. A Super Granny enables you to organize your work and family life flexibly. This means that you will receive regular and long-term support with childcare at home.
