Delicious

“Delicious”: It might throw too many ingredients on the table, but director Eric Besnard’s creation is a special meal, an epicurean and cinematic delight. Rooted in the emergence of the first restaurant ever, it’s set in 1789 France, a culinary era when all the rich and royal ate the very best, and the common people, not so much. Subject to the rote whims of the fussy and privileged Duke of Chamfort (Benjamin Lavernhe, given too little screen time), chef Pierre Manceron (Gregory Gadebois) loses his gig after trying to nudge the duke to eat outside his comfort zone. So Pierre returns to the country and reluctantly takes on middle-aged trainee Louise (Isabelle Carre). The two shoulder raw wounds from their past, but make a strong team. So do the two actors in this mouthwatering foodie drama that is as appetizing as the dishes whipped up in it.
