What is a Wedding Celebrant

A Wedding Celebrant is a professionally trained and fully insured officiant, with the skills, qualities and experience in place to create personalised ceremonies.

Celebrants are for couples who feel they want something more personal, unique or meaningful than a religious or civil wedding or partnership. A Celebrant has no restrictions in terms of the content, format or style of a wedding, and can therefore be completely personalised. This means the ceremony is warm and relaxed, and ensures lasting memories for everyone attending.

Becoming A Wedding Celebrant

Individuals from all walks of life have come to learn how to provide meaningful, personalised weddings specifically for families regardless of their religious affiliation or no affiliation.

We travel throughout the UK providing this unique and specialised training. It is an intense, participant-oriented training where you will have a chance to practice, discover resources and build your skills in working with families and making public presentations. Anyone who has an interest in serving people in this capacity who also has abilities in the areas of writing and public speaking.

Participants will also gain a greater understanding of the importance of the creative writing and public speaking, wedding protocol and current trends in the wedding service.

They will improve their ability to listen, interpret and understand the needs of families and demonstrate the ability to assist them in planning a service most appropriate and meaningful. Upon completion, participants will have improved storytelling and creative writing skills, public speaking confidence and will be equipped with the knowledge and skills to develop meaningful relationships with families.

What is a Funeral Celebrant

In the broadest sense, a funeral celebrant is simply the person who conducts a funeral service. This could be a religious official following a traditional funeral ceremony, or a civil celebrant who will lead a humanist or semi-religious service.

As the name suggests, a celebrant leads a celebration. This could be at a wedding or christening ceremony, but also at a funeral, where increasingly the 'celebration of life' is a common theme.

In a religious context, the celebrant is more generally referred to by their office - priest, minister, imam, rabbi - and they conduct the service within their religious tradition's established funeral rites. The term celebrant is more commonly used to describe civil funeral officials who create and lead services shaped to suit the personal preferences of the deceased or their family without reference to religious tradition.

Becoming A Funeral Celebrant

Individuals from all walks of life have come to learn how to provide meaningful, personalised funerals specifically for families regardless of their religious affiliation or no affiliation. We travel throughout the UK providing this unique and specialised training, which is changing the face of the funeral service. It is an intense, participant-oriented training where you will have a chance to practice, discover resources and build your skills in working with families and making public presentations.

We have trained a variety of people to allow them to become professional funeral celebrants: funeral directors, funeral arrangers, lawyers, school teachers, hospice professionals, police officers, firemen, journalists, writers, television presenters, actors, business people, radio presenters, commentators from SKY Sports, cabin crew, registrars, wedding celebrants, semi-retired individuals and people from a professional working background. Individuals who are confident in working closely with other individuals and addressing the public. Does this sound like you?

Ideal for those wishing to change or begin a new career and business. Anyone who has an interest in serving people in this capacity who also has abilities in the areas of writing and public speaking. Participants will also gain a greater understanding of the importance of ceremony and funeral service, working with funeral providers and bereaved families, creative writing and public speaking, funeral protocol and current trends in the funeral service.

I would like to say that you and the course was a great course to wedding celebrancy, going from the simple to the more complex, even in just 2 days. The use of Zoom was a great way of doing things in these difficult times, because you were able to share your resources simply and quickly, helping me to use them for the tasks you set. It also helped with Linda and I to interact with you and each other. Rest periods were fine too and welcome as we worked on the tasks you set. Giving up your weekend, shows that you are dedicated to this, and gives me confidence in your course. In addition for you to go the extra mile to support us, was a bonus. Your ability to speak frankly and with knowledge both theory and practically using services you have conducted, also gave you credibility, which is a great confidence builder in myself to know that we are being taught the "right things". So thank you, I will be in contact in future as I start off in this new venture. I also wish you and Stuart a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year in these strange times.
