There's something dark inside of me There's a gigant juged hole That twists and rips through my soul Like the roots of some old wretched tree There's something dark inside of me There's something haunting, oh my love There's nothing good I'm thinking of Still I'm gilded and groomed, gliding into the room Saying such bold and beautiful things There's something dark inside of me There's something rumbling in my mind Secrets that you weren't meant to find Thought you knew me so well?

I will see you in hell Before I let you live to tell what you've seen There's something dark inside of me I need someone to set me free So I call out your name But you seem so far away Anyway, who could save one like me? Compuesta por: Dustin Kensrue.

Once Han Solo is captured by Darth Vader, he is tortured into confessing his clogging one of the bathrooms on Cloud City. As the story comes to a close, Luke interrupts the ending sequence and raises the viewer's awareness to all of the "unanswered questions" that the movie leaves behind. The Western Union postal worker from the film Back to the Future then appears, and hands Luke a message delivered by Doc Brown from the year , with the story then ending on the words "To be Concluded", in the same fashion of Back to the Future. The episode then cuts back to the Griffin family household, with Peter immediately rehashing the argument between him and Chris that first started in "Blue Harvest", [2] a joke grounded in the fact that Chris' voice actor, Seth Green, is one of the creators and producers of the stop motion comedy series Robot Chicken.

Peter begins by suggesting that Robot Chicken would never be able to top the story he had just told. Hearing this, Chris defends Robot Chicken. Peter continues to poke at Chris and finally states that he "may have more time to tell another story" entitled Without a Paddle , a critically panned movie in which Seth Green starred. Chris then angrily storms off yelling "Fuck you" to Peter. In a significant decrease from the previous episode, "Something, Something, Something, Dark Side" was viewed in 6. The episode acquired a 3. The episode beat the season finales of The Simpsons and The Cleveland Show in both the 18—49 demographic and in total viewership. Reviews of the television broadcast were highly positive, praising its close attention to detail in parodying the original film. Jason Hughes of TV Squad found the episode to be "incredibly [impressive]", going on to note, "As much as we fans love the films, we know they're not perfect, and that they're down right ridiculous in places.

Family Guy managed to point out virtually all of those moments in this parody. Club found the episode to have "a lot of solid laughs", and admired the show for "throwing itself into these oversize movie parody things". On December 22 , before the episode first aired, it was released on DVD in Region 1 , and — in a first for the series — the episode was available on Blu-ray Disc. The episode was written by David A. Goodman and Cherry Chevapravatdumrong, and directed by Peter Shin, in his first episode since the fourth season. From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia. Main article: It's a Trap! Retrieved. TV Squad. They didn't even say goodbye to him, his 'brothers and sisters' didn't get to say goodbye, and he was ushered into a car with his social worker and taken to a children's home. This illustrates how children in care are 'set free' at 18, and expected to cope on their own. Most of them have no family or many friends, and are left to fend for themselves. Lemn was given the information to start to find his birth mother, which is a very interesting part I don't want to give anything away though! I don't know whether he is angry about the way he was treated, but I'm angry on his behalf!
